Interest only. No additional fees.

Pay only when you use credit. Pay nothing when you don't.

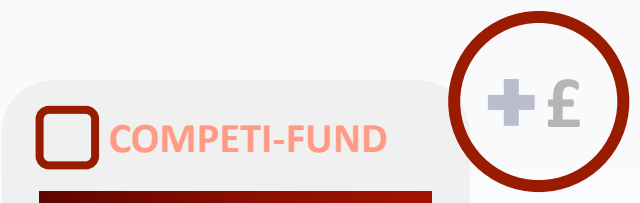

Built for transparency and growth.

Why partners win with FLEXI CREDIT

- More approvals, longer relationships: Customers Reload instead of reapplying - clients grow without friction.
- Offer a fairer alternative: Customers know exactly what they pay, and why.
- Earn more over time (on capital): initial commission + commission on every reload

Charging businesses to not use credit inhibits growth.

- Value transparency and predictable monthly repayments
- Are charged fairly, only when using credit
- Like the option of repaying early without extra fees

Common use cases

- Stock and inventory
- Supplier payments
- Bridging cashflow gaps
- Marketing spend and growth pushes

How the Reload works

Draw credit during your 30-day window (multiple draws allowed)

Repay capital monthly, starting 60 days from the opening of your account

Reload when outstanding balance is under 2/3 of credit limit.

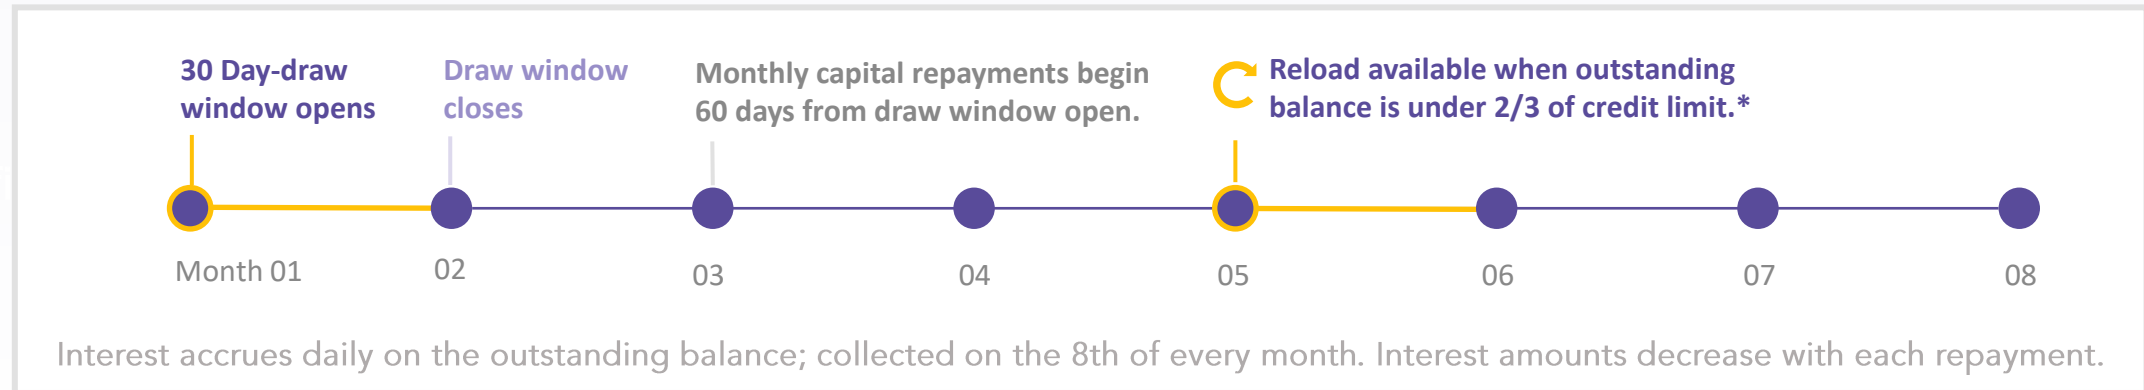

Interest accrues daily on the outstanding balance; collected monthly.
Interest amounts decrease with each repayment.
Reload subject to a check-up by the credit team.

60 days to first capital repayment

First capital repayment is due 60 days from the start of the draw window.

Example timeline

Why this matters

Time to deploy funds before repayments begin

Helps cashflow planning

Reduces early-stage repayment pressure

Reloads are subject to a short account check-up by the credit assessment team

Risk-based pricing. No hidden fees

Rates are based on business strength

Best-fit clients 1.99% – 5.25%

per month, risk-based.

Rates reflect business strength. The structure is always the same. No fees added on top.

The hidden cost tax (why clients switch)

Some lenders charge ongoing service fees or bake costs into their pricing, meaning businesses can still pay hundreds per month even when flexibility isn't fully used

Reload: What it is (and isn't)

Scenario one:

Accounts can be reloaded for another 30-day funding window whenever the balance is under 2/3 of the credit limit.

Scenario two:

If the balance remains below 2/3 of the credit limit when the initial 30-day funding period closes, accounts can be immediately reloaded.

All Reloads are subject to a short assessment.

FAQs

“Is it more expensive than competitors?”

“Often not, because fees aren’t buried elsewhere. Total cost depends on draw and interest rate. We can compare instantly.”

“Why is the interest rate changing?”

“Risk-based pricing and the structure is always fair: no fees added on top.”

“Clients will worry about ‘reloading’.”

“Reload just means the available credit opens back up when they’ve repaid down. It’s not a new loan application and customers and reloads are approved following a check-up by the credit team.”

Commission

£ Partner earnings

- Initial commission on the drawn capital
- Commission on capital taken from each reload
- Long term revenue potential driven by repeat reloads.
- Commission is paid upfront removing the old trail model.

How brokers win

- Lead with: No service fees. No penalties. Just clear, upfront costs.
- Explain that 'reload' is simply a revolving process saving multiple applications for new loans
- Position reload as growth-friendly flexibility
